

ART & MEDIA

IN BERLIN

INTERNSHIPS IN GERMANY
Krupp Internship Program for Stanford Students in Germany

Berlin is a mecca for aficionados of art and film. The legendary arts scene from the 1920s has reemerged since the re-opening of the city after the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989. The most significant revival is taking place in the neue Mitte, the former city center of East Berlin. The city provides vast opportunities for artists, art historians, and art theorists alike. With an abundance of world-renowned collections, the most prominent of which are in the museums of the Staatliche Museen Preussischer Kulturbesitz (SMPK), the city displays art and artifacts from the earliest to the most recent periods of European and non-European cultures. Berlin is home to 200 galleries, numerous media institutions, and art institutions, such as Universität der Künste, one of the most prominent academies of fine arts in Germany. Replete with film archives, museums, companies and art cinemas, Berlin/Potsdam is a vibrant center of European filmmaking. The “Berlinale,” the Berlin International Film Festival, is held each February and attracts some of the most exciting films produced worldwide.

The Stanford-in-Berlin program in collaboration with the Art and Communication Departments aims to provide possibilities for students to study art, media, and film and to participate in internships in various creative fields throughout Germany. Internship hosts include not only Berlin’s museum collections, art schools and research institutions but many commercial software and multimedia producers, the movie industry, and pioneering clubs and galleries in media art. Stanford-in-Berlin has a well-equipped multi-media lab and is hoping to expand facilities and software for video, photography and digital art.

Art Resources at the Stanford-in-Berlin Campus

The Stanford-in-Berlin program offers lecture-based courses on art and architecture, contemporary theatre, and German cinema. In addition, special excursions to places such as the Bauhaus museums in Dessau and Weimar are offered depending on quarterly course offerings.

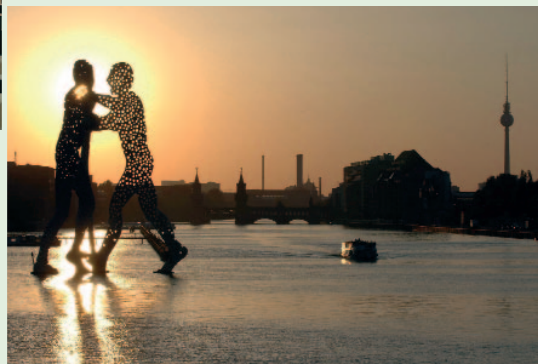

Berlin boasts three opera houses and many theatres, which sell student tickets at low prices. The Stanford-in-Berlin program covers the cost of entrance to all museums, galleries, theaters, operas and concerts, if and when the excursions are integral to coursework. In addition, the Bing Cultural Enrichment subsidies (provided by a grant from Dr. Peter and Mrs. Helen Bing) sponsor group concerts and opera visits; the Berlin program offers subsidies of theater, opera, classical music, concerts, museums, and German films. In cooperation with opera and theater experts, the program also provides introductory discussions on performances attended as a group.

Students who come to Berlin in the winter quarter can take advantage of attending the “Berlinale,” the Berlin International Film Festival. The program invites specialists to provide students with an orientation of this annual, world-class festival. Students enrolled in the winter quarter film course attend the Berlinale free of charge.

RESOURCES AND CONTACTS

At the Stanford-in-Berlin program, students have regular access to the following resources:

- A large collection of books and videos on studio art, film, and music history.
- Access to studio space (provided for majors either at the Stanford-in-Berlin facilities or at one of the Berlin art schools); interested students should inquire prior to arrival in Berlin.
- Access to digital photography and video technology.
- A grand piano and two guitars; rental of other musical instruments is subsidized by the Bing Cultural Enrichment Grant.

INTERNSHIP OPPORTUNITIES

in Art, Performing Arts and Media

The Krupp Internship Program arranges 3–6 month, fully paid, full-time internships with leading companies and institutions for students of any major/minor who have participated for at least one quarter in the Stanford-in-Berlin Program and have completed the equivalent of 1 year of college-level German. Internships can be arranged in a variety of art fields and with institutions or individual artists from all over Germany.
