

Studying and Interning in Germany in 2017 – Anniversary of the Reformation

On October 31, 1517, according to record, Martin Luther posted 95 theses against the sale of indulgences on the door of the Wittenberg castle church. In 2017, in Germany not only will the 500. anniversary of this event as a confessional crossroad be commemorated, but the reformation itself as an historical movement which profoundly shaped modernity will be marked with many conferences, exhibitions, educational programs and other activities. You can be part of these activities by studying or/and interning in Germany! Use the anniversary to look at German society and history through the window of it's religious and confessional heritage.

As part of Stanford's Bing Overseas Study Center (BOSP), the Berlin Study Center, in addition to intensive German language classes, offers courses on German and European politics, economics, history and culture. It's "Krupp Internship Program for Stanford Students in Germany" offers three-month, fully paid internships for all majors and minors throughout Germany with all kinds of hosts, including museums, archives, educational and research institutions. There is no limited set of pre-fabricated internship positions. Instead, the program finds suitable hosts according to the students' qualifications and interests.
